

Guide to the Female Electro Orgasm

It has long been understood by the Chinese that stimulation of certain points along the body's meridian lines has beneficial effects.

Meridian lines are similar to the copper traces on an electronic circuit board, running throughout the body. These are used in acupuncture and acupressure. Specific points on these lines have specific health benefits.

The point being stimulated here is known as SP6 (also known as San Yin Jiao or Spleen 6) Three Yin Intersection: the meeting Point on the Spleen Channel with the Liver and Kidney Channels. SP6 is located on the inner side of the leg just above the ankle. This point is on both legs.

Points SP6 can be stimulated with gentle electro stimulation using re-usable electro pads.

The key to success in stimulating point SP6 is a low, gentle intensity with gentle increasing frequency over a period of time. For success it is important to be relaxed, comfortable and allow plenty of time.

It has been shown that the stimulating of this point is more effective for women achieving orgasm than men. However there are other points on the male body that can be equally stimulated to achieve the same effect. (See our "Guide to Male Sexual Electro Exploration")

Warning! Do not stimulate SP6 if pregnancy is known or suspected.
